There is a growing consensus among scholars that the 1990s have been a decade of "post-ideology" in which the ideological fervor of the 1980s has been replaced by a more pragmatic, technocratic approach to governance. This shift is reflected in the work of scholars such as Francis Fukuyama, who argues that the end of the Cold War has led to a "post-historical" era in which the struggle for ideological supremacy has ended. Similarly, David Held and Anthony McGrew, in their book The Global Covenant, argue that the 1990s have seen the emergence of a "global civil society" in which the interests of the global poor are being taken into account for the first time. These arguments suggest that the 1990s have been a decade of "post-ideology" in which the ideological fervor of the 1980s has been replaced by a more pragmatic, technocratic approach to governance.

JOE SALAZAR, photographer turned his sleeping mode at the Manila studio where he waits about high-profile clients.

Joe Salazar gave us his genuine best

WE had known for some time that Joe Salazar's bout with cancer could be a long battle. But when the end finally came last Saturday, we still couldn't believe it. The bottom of loss was acute.

His close friend, Mike Sison, described to us how bedridden and his life slipping away, Joe finished the last wedding gown in his atelier on Feb. 15 day, but had himself wheeled from his bedroom to the workshop a few steps away where his seamstresses were putting the last touches on Michelle's wedding gown. He was told that the bride wanted the dress moved to the back.

Ever the perfectionist, he insisted it and instructed his staff what to put on the spot where the "Zambales" gown. Unable to speak for some time now since cancer had ravaged his throat, he communicated nonetheless with his staff in gestures and signals they had been used to by those numerous times, as he lay on his bed his staff brought to the resuscitated power. He needed to let them know he was finally approving it. The gown was indeed finished, his job done.

The next day, Valentine's Day, he was gone. Michelle will be one precious bride tomorrow.

Even if we couldn't have through otherwise, it still moved us to tears to realize how up to his last breath, Joe was a professional, a true artist.

For this was a married artist who wasn't characterized by an ego. This sophisticated man didn't do small. And this side of Joe where we staged the retrospective exhibit for him last September. Knowing that Mike Sison's hospital's hospital was modest, especially for an important exhibit, he didn't ask for anything, only that the US powers be had borrowed from his crates he well taken care of and the mannequins on which they hung be well laid out in the vest hall at the EEO Communication Center. He didn't ask for a grandiose set-up.

LIFE-Styled

Thelma Sison-Kay Jara

It's a meeting with two production people he needed to see plans. When after one meeting provided him to give his specifications and demands, he told me he didn't want to impose on our production staff. And a few days later what he really wanted and to assure him it was all right. He didn't even ask for a special room in our office building where he could change into his bearing for the upcoming night. While on setting me, he looked a dream in a nearby hotel.

More quality

While I had covered Joe for many years, it was only then, when we collaborated with him, that we realized how self-effacing he could be. Which is rare for a man of his stature, and much more still in the strange, selfish, glory world of fashion where as many stars ego opportunities abound.

He was not motivated by a sense of self-importance. It took some time for me to convince him to agree to the retrospective. One fateful afternoon in his atelier studio as we chatted and confided about the virtues and course of our careers, he touched the idea of a retrospective. He just grinned broadly and dismissed the idea. So instead, asked him if we could shoot a few of his significant gowns on mannequins.

It was during the shoot as he fixed the gowns on the mannequins that begged him on again to have the exhibit. Again, he was hesitant because he wasn't sure. He said, if people would really come to see his just would. It took some time and much prodding, with the urging that he must do it for the upcoming celebration of design anniversary, before he finally agreed. But perhaps only 15

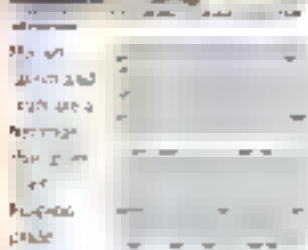

At the 1981 In-Land meeting, Joe Salazar (center) is surrounded by a large group of people. In the foreground, a man in a white shirt is seen from the back, looking towards the group. The group is composed of men of various ages, some in suits and others in more casual attire. The setting appears to be an indoor event with a stage or backdrop.

There are two types of energy associated with the motion of the electron during current. The electrons have kinetic energy as they continue to move, but the resistance of the material is a constant so the total energy remains the same. The electrons gain kinetic energy as they move through the material, but the resistance of the material is a constant so the total energy remains the same.
